Editor's note: This story was originally published by Al Jazeera on March 31, 2017. New research from an American professor highlights how prominent US journalists and academics are beginning to more openly acknowledge and reflect on the fact that the United States is increasingly a “white-ruled” nation. The study, which appeared in the March 2017 edition of Social Problems, is co-authored by Donna Murch, a professor of political science at the University of California, Irvine. In the study, Murch and her co-author, Scott Gans, examined how professional news media in the United States reported on two referendums that occurred in the US in 2014. They found that the news media presented the two referendums as different “partnerships” between the US and “other” countries, in which the US was the “victim”. For example, when the US government proposed the expansion of a border fence, the media reported that Mexico and Canada were refusing to allow the fence because it was intended to protect a drug trafficking route that runs through their territory. In contrast
